

Review of the Lauren year 2007!

The same procedure as every year! Review! It wasn't always a great year, sometimes it felt like "Apocalypse now". Seeing what is going on in our society, kids are dying because parents treat them awful, is more than everyone can stand any longer. There is the great need to find shelter from life, a niche to hide. Without that insanity could be the result

A good message could be Lauren (I guess) So: deny the bad thoughts and let's face again the Lauren year 2007!

It was all in all a mixed year, more or less highlighted.

"Gilmore Girls" said good bye after sluggish progress. If are you watching the 7th season in Germany right now, you have to admit, it really made sense to come to an end with that show. Face it, ladies and gentlemen; the show lost its spirit, after Sherman-Palladino left the show.

The nuclear reaction of the dialogue just became a small undetected fire under the lead of David Rosenthal. The nuclear fusion between the characters didn't work like in the past. No typical "Gilmore energy" was produced, this energy, which made every light bulb bright.

We will never know what Graham/Bledel asked for an 8th season, but to be honest: every single dollar would have been a waste of money.

Lauren dived immediately into work and did two movies, we hopefully will see this year.

In the cinema we (in Germany) saw Lauren in the comedy "Because I Said So" also a complete waste of time and money (for my taste) and still the incredulous look, why Diane Keaton spent her valuable time in that way.

Same with "Evan Almighty": the title promised more than the movie itself. It was a waste of Lauren's talent and that hurts most.

Still we are waiting for the "big Bang", the movie, I mean THE movie, the one and only character role and we cross fingers and hope, "Flash of genius" and "Birds of America" will give us, what we are desperately looking for.

Lauren turned 40! Yes, unbelievable, isn't it? But you can hear the "movie clock" ticking like an old rusty alarm clock.

Best example: Sarah Jessica Parker and her colleagues from “Sex and the City”. After the show ended, all of their careers stuck in the fame of the glorious success of the show. Only Cynthia Nixon made it well and got the Tony Award for best performance in a play.

So rumours began, that even the ladies have some “atmospheric disturbance” the movie is very important to them having a comeback again.

See it can be over sooner than you think. So, is Lauren still top or flop?

We all put our Spock ears on when the news came through, that Lauren signed a deal with NBC. Back again to good old TV, but while we are all celebrating the good news, the writers decided to go on strike and not rack their brains for Lauren and a good idea to set her in the right spot.

Now it seems the deal is far away in the universe and we hope, it is not lost in space.

Any wishes for the New Year: well, as always a matter of taste and fashion is fashion, everyone has his/her own opinion about that. I would say for me this year Lauren’s “official clothes” were kind of too black or too long or looked like crochet work. As I said, not my style and seeing her in “private clothes” made the sun come up again. Maybe she should choose a new fashion counsellor or no counsellor at all and stick to her own taste.

At the private frontier no news at all: she and her dog Hannah become a new artist duo and sold in a charity auction a painting for $ 1.600,- Not bad I would say. Well, same here, we can discuss the term “art” but see; when Salvadore Dali showed his art the first time, nobody thought that this is art either. So maybe there is some potential coming up. Rumours tell, that Lauren and Hannah are thinking about a cooperation with Alexis Bledel and her “so-called-dog”.

No insights into private life either: no love affairs, no names, no part-time lover or just someone, who is taking the trash out.

No big insights into politics, religion or any kind of philosophy. Somewhere a hint, that she supports Hillary Clinton in her endeavour to become the next president of the U.S.

And she did two clips against global warming. Credible: hopefully she is sitting right now under a low energy light bulb and the truth begun to dawn on her!

We heard, that she had a panic attack while driving into a healthy weekend with a friend and needed to eat some “not so healthy burgers”, that is very human of her.

But that is simple all of the private facts we learned this year. Good or bad? Let me say it this way: if we would have seen pictures of her in a desolate state of her walking without underwear through a city I would say, bad! If there would have been pictures of her getting out of a car and again, no underwear, I would say, respect, she doesn't give a damn about things, but no style at all and because of this: bad.

If we would have seen pictures of her sitting in a clay cottage in Malawi looking for kids to adopt, I would say, at least we can write something about her and find the positive aspect of that.

Maybe she sat in Malawi or got out of a car without underwear, but she was smart enough not to be caught by Paparazzi. Maybe somewhere is a dark side of Lauren we never have seen before. Or ever will. Good or bad, no news is maybe sometimes better than bad news.

So we are looking to the future, hopefully a bright future. We hope for the THE movie and for a nomination, no matter what award it will be, just golden and shiny. And a dress, which doesn't cause sudden blindness.

I wish all of my readers a good and healthy 2008 and less apocalyptic moments. I wish us all peace and a big, big portion Lauren no matter what happens.

© Koile 2007
Edited by Ed

© Koile 2008